ACKNOWLEDGMENT

Many women have contributed to this publication—elected women, formerly elected women, unelected women, and soon-to-be-elected women. They all share the hope that more women will participate in the political process. They share the belief that greater participation of women in the political process will improve the lives of all Nova Scotians. They also share the belief that greater participation of women will improve the way politics is conducted in our society. Thank you all.

A special thank you to Marie Crooker, whose dedication to this cause brought the first edition of this booklet into being. Marie was an Advisory Council member for the South Shore from 1987–1991. She spent a lifetime volunteering for transition houses, shelters, food banks, hospital boards, and school boards. She was also active in politics and campaigned for human rights.

The key, she believed, was to get women directly and equally involved in the decision-making process at the highest level. She hoped this guidebook would bring us one step closer to that goal.

FOREWORD

The Advisory Council on the Status of Women has prepared this guide to help women in Nova Scotia who are interested in politics.

- We hope it encourages you to become actively involved as a representative or candidate at the community, municipal, provincial, band council, or federal level.
- We hope it gives you suggestions and ideas that you can apply to your area of interest within your community.
- We hope it inspires more Nova Scotia women to lend their voice to public service.
- We encourage you to visit our website at www.women.gov.ns.ca/leadership for up-to-date, statistical information on the political participation of women in Nova Scotia and throughout Canada.

QUOTABLE WOMEN

Most people working towards bettering communities, raising money in rural Nova Scotia, are women. They have to be very creative and diligent to keep organizations going. That's a skill needed in politics.

Ruth Allen

Former Cumberland District School Board member, elected 1979

First female chair of the Cumberland School Board

Former Cumberland County Councillor, elected 1982, 1985, 1988, 1991, 1994, 1997

First female Warden of Cumberland County

Every individual brings their voice to the table, but a woman brings a different perspective and way of doing things than men.

I think everyone believes they can make a difference, but decision-making means listening to other views. Teamwork is very important and it takes a long time to make change. It is important in politics that what you say and what you do is right the first time.

Muriel “Fluff” Baillie

Former MLA, Pictou West, elected 1999

It may be more difficult as a woman to become involved in a political area while trying to raise a family, but it is possible and very rewarding. We need a cross-section of age, gender, and minority groups across all levels of government to represent our electors to the best of our ability. Women need to step up to the plate and realize in their own minds that they are equal. There are opportunities galore out there. Follow your dreams—they are accessible through hard work, commitment, and believing in one's self.

Carolyn Bolivar-Getson

Former MLA, Lunenburg West, elected 2003, 2006

Cabinet Minister 2003–2009

It was awkward as the first woman elected to an all-male council until my colleagues discovered there was credibility there. Women often downplay their assets when considering public life, but they should remember there are connections outside the business community. All women have certain skills whether it is as a volunteer on the PTA or some community committee. These are relevant skills and anyone who wants an active role or wants to participate or see something happen in their community should pursue it. Either run for office or, at the very least, vote.

Sheila Fougere

Former HRM Councillor, Connaught-Quinpool, elected 1998, 2000, 2004
First woman elected to HRM Council (formed in 1996)

For any woman who is still raising a family, politics is very difficult and adapting the family to political life is very difficult. Weekends are as busy as weekdays and the family has to be prepared to jump in and support the candidate.

Sandy Jolly

Former MLA, Dartmouth North, elected 1988, 1993

It's a hard world, a hard life, politics, and what women see of politics in the House of Commons goes against their more consensus-building approach. It is unpleasant, adversarial, and unseemly. That image does nothing to encourage women to run. The image of the political sphere has to change.

I went into politics because of my interest in social justice, disability, and the arts. It is women who ask the questions about pay equity, health care, child poverty, and disability.

Wendy Lill

Former MP, Dartmouth, elected 1997, 2000

Politics is the hardest, most challenging, most rewarding experience I've had. I only wish there were more women. Until there is a critical mass of women, the blood-sport culture will not change.

Maureen MacDonald

MLA, Halifax Needham, elected 1998, 1999, 2003, 2006, 2009, 2013
Cabinet Minister 2009–2013
First female Minister of Finance

Politics is not a 9 to 5 job. There is no such thing as “regular” hours and that makes it tough on family life. Anyone who feels they have something to contribute, something to add, should not hesitate to enter political life at whatever level best suits them. Dedication and commitment is the key.

Mary Ann McGrath

Former MLA, Halifax Bedford Basin, elected 1999

Decision-making is always improved by involving those impacted by the decisions. Women are a significant part of our society and must bring their experience, talents, perspectives, priorities, and approaches to the political process. Politics is about how decisions get made—whether in the family, neighbourhood, school, church, organization, advisory committee, elected public office, etc. Women need to voice their concerns in places where action can be taken to improve life for those we care about and all those we haven’t met yet.

Marilyn More

Former MLA, Dartmouth South–Portland Valley, elected 2003, 2006, 2009

If women have the time and the ability they should get involved whether it is the school board, ABCs, or as MLA. The thing I have learned that I didn’t know is how important it is to have ordinary people. If you left the running of society to the machine of government it would be a living hell. You need the touches of ordinary people or you’d just end up with systems and no room for humanity.

Jane Purves

Former MLA, Halifax-Citadel, elected 1999
Cabinet Minister 1999–2003

As a novice, the more I became involved in the election process, the more I understood why our political system has been predominantly male. The political process is open to ideas, yet as a stay-at-home mother, it’s hard to get ideas on the public agenda. But women, as women, have a perspective that needs to be expressed, and the legislature is a much better place to do so than I would ever have believed.

Michèle Raymond

Former MLA, Halifax-Atlantic, elected 2003, 2006, 2009

There is never a dull moment, especially in such a diverse district like mine. You always have to expect the unexpected. A true sense of community can shine through at times.

Dawn Sloane

Former HRM Councillor, Halifax-Downtown, elected 2000, 2004, 2008

The adversarial nature of party politics was a concern for me as a new MLA, and I believe it can discourage women from getting involved. I was used to a polite and businesslike municipal council. Entering the provincial arena was a culture shock. That being said, there are tremendous opportunities to help the people we represent and to work with community groups. These activities on the local level are what politics should be about and that is where I believe we can be most effective as elected representatives.

From my experience, the positive aspects of political involvement far outweigh the negative. I encourage other women to get involved.

Diana Whalen

Former HRM Councillor, Clayton Park West–Rockingham–Prince’s Lodge, 2000
MLA, Halifax–Clayton Park, elected 2003, 2006, 2009, 2013
Cabinet Minister and first female Deputy Premier, 2013 to present

This has been an incredible journey. The workload at times can be challenging, and I get frustrated by the amount of energy that goes into the political gaming. That energy could be better used to get things done more efficiently.

I encourage women to seriously consider a role in politics. We need more of our voices heard around the tables where important decisions are made that affect us. There are many rewards, such as standing up and advocating for those who cannot, and putting forward ideas and solutions on important issues that face us today.

Vicki Conrad

Former MLA, Queens, elected 2006, 2009

INTRODUCTION

Nova Scotia women want to run for public office. They want to be councillors and mayors and MLAs and MPs. Some even dream of becoming premier and prime minister. How do we know? We asked them. At a conference on Women in Politics held in 1990 at Mount Saint Vincent University, we talked with them. Women want political involvement at all three levels of government, with all political parties. That conference was followed by regional workshops throughout Nova Scotia and several Nova Scotia Campaign Schools for Women. All of these forums confirm that women are willing to fully participate in political office. So why doesn't that interest translate into candidates, votes, and seats? How do we translate interest into election victories?

Votes for Women was first produced by the Nova Scotia Advisory Council on the Status of Women in 1991 as a resource to Nova Scotia women looking for practical information on entering the political arena. Over two decades have passed, and although the percentage of Nova Scotia women elected to political office remains lower than their male counterparts, women are participating and achieving success in politics.

For example, following the Nova Scotia General Election in 2013, a record 27 per cent of the province's elected MLAs are now women—that's 14 out of 51. In addition, 5 female provincial cabinet ministers have been appointed to the Executive Council, another historic high for the province. And gender parity was achieved in school board representation in 2012, with women winning 55 per cent of elected school board positions across the province.

But despite these achievements, only 9 per cent of Nova Scotia's Members of Parliament are women. Only 20 per cent of mayors and wardens are women. Only 24 per cent of municipal or town councillors are women. This tells us we have more to do.

This tells us that political parties have not yet overcome structural barriers to the extent necessary to have women elected in numbers that reflect the population. Why not? Is it systemic discrimination, lack of financial resources, or lack of support systems for women as candidates? At most levels women continue to make up a minority of politicians—with the notable exception of school boards—even though their desire to seek office remains strong.

Workshops and Campaign Schools conducted throughout the province to date confirm that women in rural and urban areas are strongly committed to community, municipal, provincial, band councils, and federal politics and want to increase their involvement in the future.

While equal numbers of women and men have not yet been achieved in the political arena, it is vital that more women become directly involved in the process of governance—in elected office, amongst party political systems for federal and provincial levels of government, and in community leadership. It is to this end that the Nova Scotia Advisory Council on the Status of Women continues to foster women’s participation in political leadership with this new edition of Votes for Women: A Political Guidebook for Nova Scotia Women.

ASSESSING YOUR STRENGTHS

The decision to enter public life is a highly personal one, based very much on your personal circumstances. Do not dismiss the importance of your current job, your family, your finances, and your personal life. You must also reflect on the support you currently have from family, friends, the community, and, when applicable, the political party you wish to represent. Weigh these against your interest, ability, and commitment to contribute to public life.

On the other hand, don't underestimate what you have to offer. Women have been socialized to underestimate their abilities and strengths and have been conditioned to dismiss many of their skills as being irrelevant to the traditional "male" role of political activity. Research has found that women's confidence levels and political ambitions are lower than their male counterparts, even though they have many skills, expertise, and experiences. It is important to overcome this conditioning and to provide an honest inventory of what you may bring to the public arena.

Very often this assessment can be made easier with the help of a trusted confidante or mentor, or a candid friend who can be objective. Seek, too, the advice of current and former politicians, especially female leaders. Many are very willing to give advice and direction to potential newcomers. In many cases this mentoring crosses political party lines—political women are likely to share their experience with other interested women regardless of their individual political persuasion.

Things to consider:

- You must be ready to make the commitment. Do not let anyone, or any political party, talk you into seeking office if you are not ready to make the commitment or if you feel you are not ready. Be aware that political parties have been known to encourage women to seek election in unwinnable ridings just to increase the number of female candidates they have on the ballot.
- You must promote your values and goals to electors. This is key to a successful campaign. To that end, you must be prepared to aggressively and publicly outline your assets and downplay your shortcomings.
- You must have a good media campaign that reflects your objectives as well as your image. If you are not yet comfortable with publicity, consider professional media training. Maximize your reach by including both traditional and digital media in your plan. And be open to changing your image or “branding,” especially when engaged in party politics.
- You must have a plan to deal with any embarrassing issues that may come to light. Most people will have something from their past that they would rather forget about. But in public life, such things don’t stay forgotten. Develop a strategy to deal with such issues in an honest and open way that balances your privacy, the public’s right to know, and your opportunity to succeed in an election. Seek the advice of a trusted mentor on the more personal and difficult issues.

Use the following self-appraisal exercise to help assess your strengths. Adapt it to fit the type of political involvement you are considering and your personal situation. Ask your friends and family for their ideas. Once complete, share the results with your mentor to ensure you have not overlooked experience, skill, and competencies that you already have.

SELF-ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Assess yourself on a scale of 1 to 5, with 1 signifying an area that needs improvement and 5 an area of personal strength.

	Needs improvement			Personal Strength
Patience Level	1	2	3	4	5

Reporters and constituents may ask you inappropriate questions. You may be asked the same question many times. Can you remain calm when dealing with people whom you find annoying or frustrating?

	Needs improvement			Personal Strength
Leadership Skills	1	2	3	4	5

Do you like working with people? Do people trust you and confide in you? Are you able to listen empathetically to someone else's problems or concerns? Are you able to delegate responsibility effectively? Are you able to openly demonstrate your appreciation for the hard work and loyalty of your supporters? Do you have access to individuals and groups who would work for your campaign?

	Needs improvement			Personal Strength
Public Speaking	1	2	3	4	5

Can you speak easily and comfortably in front of diverse groups and to the media? Are you articulate? Are you able to communicate potentially complex ideas in a way that everyone can understand? Does it take you a long time to practice a speech before you feel comfortable, or do you need only to read it once or twice to ensure you remember the salient points? Are you able to handle unanticipated questions effectively?

Stress Management Skills 1 2 3 4 5

Can you set priorities and follow them? Can you deal with the highs and lows during your campaign with a fairly even temperament? How well can you handle competing demands for your time? Are you able to do many different tasks at once, or are you easily overwhelmed by disorganization and confusion? Would you be able to keep your campaign running smoothly?

Needs improvement

Personal Strength

Stamina and Endurance 1 2 3 4 5

Are you able to work long hours under stressful conditions? Can you pace yourself? Are you able to travel well and schedule your activities so you don't burn out? Are you able to stop and say no before you become completely exhausted? Do you have the physical stamina for door-to-door canvassing during elections campaigns?

Needs improvement

Personal Strength

Impact on Personal Life 1 2 3 4 5

Does your family support the idea of your getting involved in politics? Can you modify or take a leave from your work and volunteer commitments? Do you have family and friends who can take over your family commitments during the campaign? Do you have a network of friends you can trust and who can provide moral support? Could you, when necessary, put the needs of your constituents ahead of your own, especially with regards to your time?

Political Know-How 1 2 3 4 5

Do you know how government works? Do you have adequate knowledge and understanding of the issues? Do you know where you stand on these issues? If you are involved in party politics, do you know the stance of your party? Do you know how to engage in the political world, such as when to say what, how much to say, and to whom? Do you know what resources are available to help you become more informed?

WHY POLITICS? WHY ME?

Research shows that male and female candidates perform equally well during campaigns. Yet women remain under-represented, in part because fewer women put their names on the ballot. Researchers tell us that men continue to experience more freedom, comfort, and confidence to run for office.

Researchers also tell us that women are less likely to perceive a “fair political environment” and that this makes women less likely than men to pursue political involvement. Historically, politics have been male-dominated. Societal gender expectations, even today, seem to exclude women from the political arena.

Challenging and changing these perceptions are critical, because they are views that the voters may also hold about political candidates. Such views influence how they vote and may impact female candidates’ chances of winning an election. However, societal perceptions will not change unless the culture of politics also changes towards more gender equality, not only with fielding female candidates but also establishing women’s leadership and credibility.

Many female politicians recognize that one of the best ways to change the existing political culture is from within. Women must stand for office—and get elected in representative numbers—if we want influence our governments and mentor change within systems and culture.

So you are thinking about answering the call. Congratulations! That in itself is a big step. The following information will help you think carefully about the many facets of your decision to enter politics.

Think about finances

Contrary to popular belief, most people get involved in politics to contribute to society, not for personal gain. Compensation for municipal, provincial, and federal office is far below remuneration in the public and private sectors for positions with similar responsibilities, hours of work, travel, and so forth. As a matter of fact, in some municipalities and school boards, representatives are offered only a stipend or honorarium for the work they do. Before considering a political career, be sure to investigate compensation by checking with the appropriate office.

Think about potential conflicts of interest

Be aware that rules of disclosure under conflict of interest guidelines apply to political life at the provincial and federal levels and within some municipalities. These you must thoroughly understand and follow.

Think about your personal life

Consider how your decision to serve would affect your family and personal life. What sacrifices will you have to make? How do they measure up against what you hope to achieve?

Think about what you can offer

Do you think your community needs more senior centres, teen centres, parks, schools, or other amenities? Do you have concerns about violence against women, health care, the environment, education, or unemployment? Do you have ideas about how to address your concerns? Are you satisfied with the current representatives in your area?

Most people have definite, but broad, ideas about the way things should be done and how government should respond. Becoming a candidate requires that you more finely hone and define your ideas and develop a political agenda. What is your agenda? If partisan politics apply in your situation, which political party and platform best aligns with your thinking and priorities? Are you for keeping things the same? Reforming some particular facet of society? Bringing about broad social change? Know your own mind and how you hope to contribute to the public debate and political arena.

Think about what you know

Whatever your agenda, the public and the media will expect you to be knowledgeable on a variety of issues. They will assess and judge you based on your awareness of and responses to the issues affecting your community.

Think about what you stand for

It will be important to remain focused on three or four issues that you care deeply about to make you memorable to your voters, as their top candidate. Usually, these issues will comprise your platform and will set you apart from your opponents. Ensure your issues are consistent and compatible with your agenda—and the agenda of the political party you represent if you are running in partisan politics.

Think about how you will make yourself known

Voters will support the candidate who most consistently and clearly articulates their own views, and can sustain confidence from voters. Take every opportunity to repeat your views on the issues and, when all else fails, repeat them again. Allow your voters to get to know you and what you stand for.

LEARNING THE LANDSCAPE

You may already know the benefits and shortcomings of the public education system, for example, but you will not know everything about all the issues to which you will be required to respond. While you may not be able to anticipate every question, you can become aware of the issues important to your community before and during the campaign.

UNDERSTAND JURISDICTIONAL RESPONSIBILITIES

One thing you must get clear early on in your political journey is jurisdictional responsibilities. For example, education is a provincial issue while defence spending and foreign affairs are federal. Remember, though, that voters may not know jurisdictional boundaries. You need to be prepared to answer even if it means referring them to the elected representative or to a website or organization.

Research current issues

You can use various strategies to increase your knowledge about and engagement in current issues. For example, you can monitor print and digital media on any particular issue. Engaging with different communities and stakeholders on an issue is an excellent way to both increase your knowledge and broaden your network in the community as you continue on the campaign trail.

The importance of a mentor and “spheres of influence” become crucial to raising your awareness of the issues. Spheres of influence are people within the community with a level of knowledge or expertise that you can identify and learn from. They can educate you on a particular issue so that you can define your own position and build your position into your platform, or influence the platform and policy statements in your political party.

You must subscribe to or follow local news outlets, such as your local community, provincial, and national papers. This includes following electronic news outlets for breaking news, including websites and social media. Whatever level of elected office you choose, keep informed and current on issues nationally, provincially, and in your local community. You never know what issue may become relevant to voters in your area. Scan the headlines, collect relevant articles, and make sure a member of your team is tracking how current issues affect the local community and electorate. It may also be beneficial to track your electoral opponents, particularly what they say on public record through various media outlets and their social media accounts.

Public meetings are also a critical source for information. If you can't attend them all, send a representative and gather all relevant materials, reports, briefs, and presentations. Take notes for future reference. Again, go to the "spheres of influence" in the community who have rallied around a particular issue and learn first-hand about their concerns and ideas. You will gain not only awareness of the issue, but also the trust of those who see you responding to their concerns by attending their meetings and listening to their viewpoint. Remember that the moment you have declared as the candidate, you are campaigning wherever you go, all of the time.

The Internet is a useful resource for gathering information, as is your local library. Appendix 3 lists websites that can offer further information, like Community Counts (www.novascotia.ca/finance/communitycounts). If you are involved in partisan politics, your caucus offices and party websites and contacts are also primary sources of information for developing your platform further. Appendix 1 has the information for political parties in Nova Scotia.

A recommended approach is to gather information from all sides of the issue, including where your opponents stand. This will give you an edge whenever you speak to the media, talk with your constituents, or craft a response to other candidates.

JURISDICTION AND DUTIES

The level of politics you choose to enter will have to do with your interests and the public policy areas you want to influence. Reflect on the priority issues you've identified to determine what level of government has jurisdiction over the areas you are most concerned about.

Political involvement at the municipal level usually requires less of your time (although not always) and little requirement to travel outside your area. However, it usually provides no remuneration except a daily allowance for councillors for attending meetings or a yearly honorarium for mayors and wardens. Since municipal amalgamation, some mayors and councillors in Nova Scotia receive salary and travel expenses.

Provincial-level political involvement requires Members of the Legislative Assembly (MLAs) to be in Halifax during the periods the House is sitting—usually a fall and spring session, each two to four months long. This may mean driving to and from Halifax while the House is sitting or having alternative living arrangements if driving is not an option.

At the federal level, Members of Parliament (MPs) spend part of the year in Ottawa, usually Mondays through Thursdays when Parliament is sitting. You would need to maintain two residences and two offices, one in Ottawa and one in your riding.

MUNICIPAL

Municipalities have jurisdiction (although not exclusively) over issues such as local police, fire services, urban land use, housing, waste disposal, public transit, street maintenance, local industrial development, tourism, school boards, and nursing homes. Over the last decade, the lines between municipal and provincial jurisdictions have blurred to some degree. The Province of Nova Scotia's Department of Municipal Affairs is responsible for the laws under which municipalities operate. You can find more information on the relationship between local government and the province on the department's website: www.novascotia.ca/dma/publications/legislation-and-regulation.asp

Municipalities are also involved in promoting their cities and towns as locations for economic development, including local tourism, and encouraging the establishment of cultural and recreational programs. Municipal councils can contribute to day care, homeless and abused women's shelters, second-stage housing, improved police protection, improved procedures for abused women and sexual assault victims, emergency response, and coordination of some social programs.

Partisan politics is not usually a factor in municipal politics. The legislative bodies are generally small, involving a mayor, a warden, and a varying number of councillors, depending on the size of the community. Some municipalities, though, have expanded geographically and increased their numbers due to amalgamation.

The main duty of municipal councillors is to attend council and committee meetings where decisions are made for the municipality. Some councils meet weekly, bi-weekly, or once a month, aside from committee meetings. Council members receive a daily allowance for attendance, unless they receive set salaries. Mayors and wardens are responsible for presiding over council meetings and acting as spokespersons for the council. Honoraria or salaries for mayors vary considerably from municipality to municipality.

Councillors also act as advocates for their constituents and communities, answering their questions and addressing their needs with regards to municipal-related services.

PROVINCIAL

The provincial government has jurisdiction over education, health care, housing, highways, resource management, energy, environment, labour, economic development, tourism, employment rights (such as parental leave and employment equity), social services, day care, status of women, culture, and human rights.

Duties of Members of the Legislative Assembly (MLAs) vary considerably depending on whether their political party forms the government, the official opposition, or the third party. If the MLA is part of the governing party, their responsibilities also increase if they are given a Cabinet portfolio, which gives them the responsibility to govern and make decisions on provincial departments. MLAs not part of the government often carry critic responsibilities that shadow the Cabinet portfolios and hold the Ministers to account in the House.

Spending time in the visitor's gallery when the House is sitting can be an effective way of learning the role each member plays. Province House is located between Granville and Hollis Streets in Halifax. Identification is required to obtain a visitor's pass to enter Province House. In some areas, cable television channels carry the proceedings of the House when in session, or the three days (Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays) when Question Period is scheduled. You may also watch the House when it is in session online at nslegislature.ca/index.php/proceedings/legislative-tv.

MLAs also must act as ombudspersons and advocates for the needs of their constituents and community. This is often done through each MLA's Constituency Office.

FEDERAL

The federal government has jurisdiction over foreign affairs, national defence, aboriginal affairs, regional development, status of women, energy, environment, fiscal and monetary policy, justice, public safety, including criminal law, immigration, and the administration of pensions and social security, employment insurance, and federal transfers to the provinces.

Members of Parliament attend the House of Commons when the House is sitting, where they debate and develop legislation to govern matters privy to the federal jurisdiction. With the House being in Ottawa, most MPs have a residence there and travel to and from their constituency depending on the schedule of Parliament.

Similar to MLAs, duties of MPs vary depending on whether their political party forms the government, the official opposition, or the third party. If the MP is part of the governing party, their responsibilities also increase if they are given a Cabinet portfolio, which gives them the responsibility to govern and make decisions on federal departments. MPs not part of the government often carry critic responsibilities that shadow the Cabinet portfolios, and hold the Ministers to account at the House.

Likewise, MPs also act as ombudspersons and advocates for the needs of their constituents and communities. This is often done through each MP's Constituency Office.

INTER-JURISDICTIONAL ISSUES

Be aware that some areas—such as education, housing, social services, economic development, health care, and even immigration—involve all levels of government. Be sure you are knowledgeable on the interconnectedness of policy, programming, and funding in these areas at the three levels, as this can become very confusing. It is important to know who has the legislative and financial jurisdiction over what issues.

Oftentimes, these inter-jurisdictional areas frustrate constituents who simply want answers to their concerns, whatever level of government you represent. For this reason it is important to develop positive relationships with colleagues at all levels of government so that you can easily make referrals, and can potentially resolve issues that much easier.

Qualifying as a candidate

The following table summarizes the eligibility requirements for candidates at the three levels of office. Please check the appropriate election act and amendments to ensure that the information is current at the time you are running.

COMMUNITY ACTIVISM

Many women do not feel they are in a position to dedicate the time and effort required to seek office in the formal municipal, provincial, or federal arenas. Many others feel they require exposure to and experience with public service on a different scale before considering other options. Still others opt to delay their political aspirations to a point in life when family and career considerations are less demanding. Whatever the reason, many options are available to women who wish to contribute to their community without running for political office.

Community activism allows you to gain skills and build networks within your community in areas that particularly interest you. Community organizations and local chapters of volunteer organizations are good places to start. Schools in your area will have school advisory councils that seek members to represent parents and the wider community.

At the municipal level, there are many citizen committees, task forces, and advisory groups that serve around particular issues.

At the provincial level there are numerous agencies, boards, and commissions (ABCs) that are open to the public. Newspaper advertisements for openings on ABCs appear twice a year. Applications are accepted by the Executive Council office for consideration. Applicants are approved by the Human Resource Committee of the Nova Scotia Legislature on a regular basis. Visit the Executive Council's website for updated information on ABCs at www.gov.ns.ca/exec\_council.

The federal government also has a number of boards and agencies that require the participation of citizens with expertise in a variety of areas called Government in Council Appointments. Participation at the federal level may require travel to Ottawa or other areas of the country depending on the nature of the work of the board or agency. To apply, you can check out this website: www.appointments-nominations.gc.ca.

PARTISAN POLITICS

If you are considering political participation in either provincial or federal elections, you probably have a sense of which political party most fits your own views on the role and approach of government on various issues. Your past voting decisions were probably made by assessing both the candidates and the parties they represented. If you do not know each party platform, you may check out each party's websites, or call party or caucus offices and ask for their literature. Speak to or email a researcher or information officer for detailed information. (See Appendix 1 for contact information.)

Political parties welcome volunteers in a variety of roles, during elections or not. You can learn more about what may be available by contacting either the party offices or the caucus offices. You can also reach out to riding associations, especially the one in your community.

Volunteering is one of the best ways to become familiar with the party structure, platform, and various components of a campaign as each party conducts their own election-readiness workshops. There are also many opportunities to be a part of your riding association's executive committee, and even be a member of the nomination committee to give you insights of the process before you decide to put your name forward.

Some political parties maintain active women's organizations that support their female members and encourage other women who may be interested in politics. Some women's organizations within the political party system provide funding and other supports to women entering politics at the provincial and federal levels. More information on how to access this funding appears in Appendix 1.

SECURING A NOMINATION

Securing a party nomination for a provincial or federal campaign may be more difficult for women than winning an actual election. Internal party politics, which may include barriers, discrimination, and the still prevalent “old boys club” culture, make it difficult for women to gain party support at the local level. At times, political parties have encouraged women candidates to run in unwinnable ridings for the sake of increasing the number of female candidates in that particular election.

Research suggests that men are more likely to secure nominations than women. However, obstacles within party structures are gradually being eliminated. Formal and informal policies are being devised to increase the number of women working within party organizations and running as electoral candidates. It is important for parties themselves to take the steps to ensure equity within their organizations, as outside measures rarely prove effective. While securing the party nomination is often the hardest step in succeeding to elected office, women who prevail in a contested nomination often win the election.

If you have not already done so, officially join the party of your choice as a member. This is crucial and required before seeking party nomination. In addition, as a party member, you can introduce debate and pass resolutions for party policy, thus bringing forward issues of interest to you and to those you seek to represent. This can affect what your party will do to encourage more women to run for office.

Unless you intend to run without any political affiliation, you must go through a party’s nomination process. The membership of a recognized party constituency officially nominates a person to represent the party in an election. Sometimes, one individual is asked to run and secures the nomination by acclamation; at other times, two or more people run and must compete with each other to become a party representative. At the constituency level in most parties, a search committee is struck to encourage prospective candidates to seek nominations.

Every political party has a leader, both in provincial and federal politics. A leadership campaign is run the same way as an election campaign, except the voters are their respective party members rather than the general public in constituencies. Depending on the results of the general elections, the winning political leader becomes the premier or prime minister of the incoming government.

Aside from a candidate’s perceived chances of winning an election, party service may be one of the more important factors that influence the selection of candidates in closely contested ridings for nomination, especially for party leadership.

RUNNING AS AN INDEPENDENT

Running without political affiliation is almost unknown in provincial or federal politics, although it is growing in popularity as people distance themselves from party structures. However, winning an election as an independent at the provincial and federal level would be both very difficult and very expensive. You would have no party funds or resources behind you. It is more common for an elected representative to leave a party while in office and sit as an independent, but they are rarely re-elected.

The reverse is true for municipal politics. Overt party affiliation would not usually provide an advantage. As well, there are no party funds for candidates at this level.

Those who are uncomfortable with having formal affiliation with a political party often choose to pursue municipal office where partisanship does not have the role or influence they have at other levels of government. However, many elected at the municipal level move on to provincial or federal politics later in their careers. Political parties monitor municipal politicians with a view to encouraging them to seek provincial and federal nominations.

PUTTING YOUR TEAM TOGETHER

The earlier you know you want to run for office, the better. Six months to a year is good lead time. Ideally, you should have your campaign team in place about six months before the election.

Identifying the right people to fill key positions on your campaign team may be the most critical element of your election-readiness. You need people who are committed, dedicated, trustworthy, hard-working, and able to volunteer a great deal of time during the campaign period. Candidates who are sought out by a particular party and asked to run may find there is a campaign team already available. In some campaigns, party workers from other provinces are brought in to assist local constituencies.

Try to get individuals from various community groups and organizations to work on your team to ensure that you have a broad and diverse representation within your constituency. Don't limit your campaign team to just neighbours. Diversify your team to enhance your support base and improve your understanding of the various perspectives on issues. Broad support is critical.

The following are some positions and responsibilities you should consider when building a campaign team, if you want to mount an effective elections campaign. Of course, the number of individuals filling these positions will vary depending on the size of your campaign and the level of government for which you are seeking office. The more people you have volunteering for your elections campaign, the more voters you can reach and identify to vote for you. More volunteers will also ease the workload and pressure, both for you as the candidate and the rest of your campaign team. Expanding your team will also reduce the risk of having one individual responsible for everything, which can jeopardize your campaign if they are unavailable when needed.

Official Agent

At the provincial and federal levels, you must name an official agent when you register your name as a candidate. This person is responsible for keeping track of expenses and contributions, and for submitting the records to the Chief Electoral Officer at the appropriate time. Choose someone who is well-organized with a bookkeeping or accounting background.

Campaign Manager

Oversees all the other individuals on the campaign team and ensures that the course of the campaign runs as smoothly as possible. This individual directs the candidate's daily activities and should be someone with some political experience. The campaign manager is also often the conduit to the party and the riding association. Be sure to choose someone you respect and get along with, who can give you both praise and criticism, is trustworthy, and has good organizational and people skills.

Finance Coordinator/Fundraiser

Responsible for the bookkeeping and, depending on the size of your campaign, may conduct fundraising. This person should have connections, in particular with potential funding sources and should be meticulous in keeping records. This person will need to work closely with the Official Agent and be aware of all rules associated with campaign expenses. It is often suggested that fundraising activities should be completed even before an elections campaign is called.

Volunteer Coordinator

Recruits, manages, and looks after volunteers in your elections campaigns. This person assigns volunteers to different tasks in the campaign and trains them, and often looks after the scheduling. In most cases, this person also recruits drivers with vehicles that can volunteer during Election Day. In campaigns without a separate Canvassing Coordinator, this person also assigns volunteers as canvassers who either canvasses the electorate by phone or door-to-door.

Canvassing Coordinator

Finds people and assigns them to canvass households in the polling district, either door-to-door or by telephone. Strategically plans where to canvass and when. This person may also develop the canvassing script with the communications team. The main goal of canvassing is to identify your voters and get them to cast their ballot. Canvassers also identify where campaign signs can be placed and whether supporters are willing to volunteer. Canvassers share information about advance polling opportunities and ask whether supportive voters need a ride—either to an advance poll or on Election Day. The coordinator collects all this information and consults with the campaign team about updating databases with the collected information and planning follow up actions.

Campaign Headquarters Office Manager

Looks after the campaign headquarters, including replenishing the office supplies. Often welcomes guests and volunteers, answers the main phone line, and retrieves messages. Depending on the structure of your campaign, they may maintain the database or voter lists for your campaign, which are important in identifying your supporters and getting the vote out.

Communications Coordinator

Arranges for appointments for media interviews and prepares news releases in conjunction with the candidate, campaign manager, and researcher. Also schedules and designs all advertising and article submissions for newspapers, radio, and television. This person also handles all digital advertising, such as the campaign's website, and monitors and supports the candidate's social media accounts.

Signs Coordinator

Supervises the ordering and installation of posters, lawn signs, billboards, etc., and organizes the clean-up crew to remove campaign material (required within a certain time period) after the election.

Researcher/Information Officer

Locates material necessary to inform the candidate about particular issues and may help to write background material for speeches, public forums and debates, news releases, and pamphlets. Also monitors newspaper stories relative to the campaign and issues. This person often works with the different databases during the campaigns, to help identify the vote, and supporters such as volunteers and those requesting signs.

Poll Coordinator

Responsible for finding a poll captain for each electoral or polling district and scrutineers for polling day—the volunteers who watch the counting of the ballots on Election Day. They also call in final numbers to the campaign headquarters, as they become available, for an unofficial tally of votes on Election Day.

Election Day Coordinator

Organizes the scrutineers' schedules on Election Day, organizes drivers and day care for voters who need them, posts polling results in the campaign headquarters as they become available, and organizes the post-election party for the evening of polling day.

The composition of your campaign team will depend on what works for you in your area and in your circumstances, especially with your team. While the functions described above are needed, multiple functions may be handled by the same person. Every party has a campaign team guidebook for candidates that will provide more detail about what is involved in each campaign team position.

Volunteers are increasingly difficult to find for political campaigns, and, in some cases, workers are paid a stipend or salary for their contribution. Whether you can afford to pay your workers depends on the health of your campaign finances.

RUNNING A CAMPAIGN

CANVASSING

One of the most important activities for any candidate in any election at any level is the door-to-door canvass. The one-on-one connection to the voter is critical to lend the personal touch to your platform and views. While many constituencies or ridings are large geographically, you should make every effort to visit each household at least once. A second visit is desirable, particularly in areas with large numbers of undecided voters. You will need a team of well-spoken representatives to join you for the canvass. Ideally your team will be trained with a canvassing script and will be familiar with who you are as a candidate and your main messages and platform. Your team should be able to identify supporters who will vote for you on Election Day.

The candidate and volunteers should never go door-to-door alone. Be mindful of safety considerations, including house pets such as dogs. Be mindful as well that some voters may intend to keep you there for a long time, in order to delay you from getting to other households if they support your opponent.

As for timing, don't canvass early in the morning, after 9 pm, or at mealtimes, as you don't want to irritate the voters whose support you are seeking.

The whole purpose of the canvass is to share your views and allow voters to ask questions about your plans for the community and your stand on various issues. Take pamphlets with you that summarize who you are and where you stand. If no one is home, leave literature in the mailbox or on the door latch so voters know that you took the time to visit their area.

Keep a written record of homes you and your team have visited. Track whether the voters in those homes will support you or your opponent, or remain undecided. The door-to-door canvass is also your opportunity to ask if the voter will display a lawn sign on your behalf.

Note that while some campaigns include phone-based canvassing, elected candidates have continuously attributed their success to their door-to-door canvassing.

KNOWING YOUR OPPONENTS

It is important to know the strengths and weaknesses of your electoral opponents and to be aware of their positions on the concerns of voters, particularly where they differ and where they agree with your beliefs and values. There may be few ideological differences between candidates, especially in cases of party nomination, when it is even more important to clearly formulate for the party membership what it is that makes you a different and viable choice.

Gather information about other candidates from media reports, public meetings, materials published by candidates, and their social media accounts. Make sure a member of your campaign team or a supporter is able to attend each public event, ask questions, and report back to you or your campaign manager about what the other candidates have to say.

Do not go to any public meetings or debates without as many supporters as you can muster. Their role is two-fold: to ask difficult and challenging questions of your competition and to ask you questions that give you an opportunity to outline your views and share your message as the winning candidate.

AS A CANDIDATE YOU WILL BE NEWS

Next to the door-to-door canvass and understanding the views of your opponents, it is critical that you appreciate that as a candidate you will be news. As soon as you announce your candidacy, the media and the public will want to know what you have to say about the issues central to the campaign. You must be prepared in advance of your announcement to respond to any manner of question concerning the local issues, your party's platform, and the broader issues facing the community, province, or country. Make sure you are comfortable responding to the issues before you announce your candidacy. Once again, a trusted mentor, someone with experience in politics, can be a good sounding board and provide feedback on how you respond under pressure. Media training is also advisable. Media training will help you effectively deliver your message and effectively present yourself in front of the media, through techniques such as hand gestures and voice projection.

As you are about to announce your candidacy, prepare a biography that outlines your background, career history, general goals, and any personal information (family) you wish to share. A standard resumé is also important to have on hand. These are items that you can give to the media or members of the public looking to learn more about you and your views. It will also eliminate the need for you to repeat your story over and over again and risk leaving out important factors about your qualifications. For incumbents, be prepared to share and, at times, defend your record as a public official. For new candidates, you will want to highlight why you are the winning choice and what you can bring to the table as an elected official.

If the media asks you a question you find objectionable or too personal, do not feel obligated to answer it. Handling the media is a skill you need to develop as both a candidate and a politician. If you are asked questions about issues and you don't have an answer, say so. Don't try to pretend you know the facts when you don't. Most reporters and voters will respect a candidate who is honest and up front about what they do and do not know. Make a commitment to find the answer and get back to them at a later time. Then do the research and get back to them as promised. Do not make promises to the media or the public you are not prepared to keep.

THE MEDIA

The relationship between the media and the candidate is an interdependent one. The media cannot do a story without a candidate and the candidate needs the media to get her message out and reach a wider audience. While a candidate must always be aware of what is being shared to the media and be mindful of how the media spins or presents what's shared to them, as a candidate, you must develop positive and professional relationships with all members of the media to ensure that your position on the issues is articulated fairly and accurately throughout the campaign.

Updated media lists are maintained by each party before an election with names, addresses, telephone numbers, and e-mail. This includes local, provincial, and national media outlets in all its forms, including print, electronic, radio, and television. However, it is important to compile your own media list to include reporters, columnists, and commentators that are specific to your constituency or riding so that you can be sure that press releases and other notices get to specific individuals rather than ending up in the general newsroom file where it can be easily overlooked or forgotten.

Keep in mind that the party leaders will dominate most of the election coverage locally, provincially, and federally, and you will have to be on good terms with reporters, commentators, and columnists who, along with their editors, will determine what and how much to write about you and your local campaign. Interacting with local reporters on social media is one way to reach and garner interest from the local media and beyond. However, just like traditional media, you must be aware of your social media content to ensure you are managing your messages strategically to your benefit as a candidate.

It will become fairly obvious early on which reporters are supportive of you or the issues you focus on. These relationships should be cultivated and maintained in a professional and cordial manner. Always respond to a media request even if you don't intend to grant an interview. It is not only professional, but it could be helpful later on when you want coverage on a particular issue and are having difficulty conveying your message.

Do not assume that the reporter who interviews you or asks you questions is knowledgeable on the issue or trying to deliberately trip you up. While this may be the case, reporters tend to be generalists and not experts on every issue. They likely have had little time to do research or gather background material in advance of the assignment, so anything you can provide by way of background is helpful and makes the job of getting the story that much easier. This will also allow for a relationship of trust to build, and both reporter and candidate can benefit. It is helpful to know in advance what issue the reporter is calling about. Have your research officer provide you with as much information as possible before you speak to the reporter, including what your opponents may be saying about that same issue. But most importantly, as a candidate, you need to know your message and stick with it during any media interview. Be consistent and strategic with your messaging.

THE NEWS RELEASE, THE PRESS CONFERENCE

Most of the time, the media will be pursuing the candidate for reaction to an issue or event that may have an impact on the campaign. There will, however, be times when the candidate has something to say on an issue and wants coverage. There are two fundamental techniques for this purpose: the news release and the press conference.

Neither one of these should be entered into lightly or superficially, and never issue a release or conduct a press conference unless you have something important, new, or highly relevant to say. Overuse of the news release and press conference is the quickest way to dampen media interest in the campaign and tends to reflect poorly on the credibility of the candidate.

Whenever possible, keep press releases to a one page, double spaced, with just enough information to pique the interest of reporters. Too much detail in a release may cause the reporter not to bother to contact you for direct comment. Worse still, the release may end up in the newsroom garbage because reporters simply do not have time to read pages and pages of information. (See sample release in Appendix 2.)

A news conference must be reserved for major announcements. This may include the announcement of your candidacy or major developments that have a direct impact on the community. Like too many press releases, too many news conferences tend to erode the credibility of the candidate. When calling a news conference, you are asking reporters to come and listen to what you have to say, to take pictures or video, and to go away with a story fit to print or air. For this reason the news conference must be used sparingly. A press advisory should be sent in advance to let news outlets know when and where the news conference will be held and provide a general idea about its content.

The location of the press conference should take into consideration equipment and space requirements of the media. A microphone that all media can plug into makes their job easier. If you expect television reporters, consider the space requirements for a video camera and tripod. News conferences that can be held outdoors make more interesting visuals for television and lighting does not need to be set up.

At a press conference the candidate should read a brief, clear, and concise statement and then open the floor to questions from the media. If the candidate has other participants in the news conference, their statements should also be kept brief and vetted by the campaign team for accuracy and compatibility. Often times, especially in provincial and federal campaigns, a visit in your local area by the party leader garner media interests. So build an event with a press conference around that opportunity.

During the question and answer period, keep your answers brief and to the point. Stay on track with your key messages, and present yourself as a confident, competent, and relatable candidate. Some reporters may wish to do a more in-depth interview and that should be arranged for after the news conference as a one-on-one session. Again, the rule applies that if you do not know the answer, don't "wing" it. Promise to respond at a later time. Always follow up on phone calls or responses to the media, either directly or through your communications team.

ESTIMATING THE COST OF RUNNING

Research has found that women experience more difficulties in raising funds for their political campaigns. Women also generally have less disposable income to make the initial investment in their campaigns, and may have less access to financial supporters by virtue of more limited social networks.

Municipal level campaigns can be run on a limited budget with the exception of mayoralty and amalgamated municipality campaigns. Unlike provincial and federal elections, there are no party campaign funds for candidates and fundraising is left almost entirely up to the individual and her campaign team. Also, municipal campaign donations are not tax-deductible like provincial and federal donations are, which can be a disincentive to financial contributors.

Provincial and federal elections can be very expensive and, necessarily, must include an organization and management strategy that calls for greater spending. If you have already been nominated to represent a particular party in an election, you will have the financial and resource backing of your party organization. The amounts available will depend on the party and the riding association where you will be the candidate, because funds are usually raised by the local party association in preparation for an upcoming election. Make sure you are clear at the outset what your personal financial responsibility will be, and the campaigning limits and associated rules for both your nomination and elections campaign. As for your team, set a goal to fundraise as much as possible before the election writ begins so that you can focus on campaigning instead of raising funds during that time.

One of the best ways to determine how much money you need to run a successful campaign is to look at the returns for the last election at the level of government that interests you, and to check the appropriate elections act and the associated spending limits. Included in these returns are lists of candidates' expenses broken down into broad categories, such as personal expenses, office rental, travelling expenses, goods supplied, and advertising. Check your specific riding. Although expenses will vary from riding to riding, party to party, and individual to individual, you will get a general sense of how much it will cost to be competitive.

On the following page is a worksheet that you can use to estimate the amount of money it would take to run a campaign in your area at the appropriate level of government. You will need to determine which expenses are necessary, which would be beneficial if you have enough money, and which would be nice to have if you have the resources in your campaign.

Obtain realistic estimates—don't guess. Call (or have the appropriate member of your campaign team call) or search online for current prices from the photographer, the printers, the media agencies such as newspapers, the office supply store, phone company, and so on. Look for opportunities for bulk purchasing and competitive pricing.

In federal and provincial elections, candidates who secure more than 15 per cent of the votes in their polling district are reimbursed a certain amount from public funds, such as the Provincial Consolidated Fund. This is called an election rebate from the provincial or federal government. The rebate amount is based on the number of people in the riding and the number of candidates who receive more than 15 per cent of the votes. To estimate this amount, find your riding in the “election expenses of candidates” section in the returns for the latest election. If you are eligible for a $20,000 reimbursement, but you only spent $10,000 on your campaign, you will receive only what you actually spent. Do not count on this money until after you have received more than 15 per cent of the vote. Many candidates are disappointed to find they are ineligible for the rebate, particularly in elections with many candidates.

IDENTIFYING FUNDING SOURCES AND FUNDRAISING

Candidates usually have three sources of campaign funds: party contributions, individual contributions, and their own personal investment. If you are the party's nominated candidate, you will have the support and the experience of the party organization and its fundraising committees, as well as access to funds that may have accumulated since the last election from your particular riding association.

Depending on the level of government, different rules apply. In municipal politics, companies and organizations may donate to candidates. But in provincial and federal elections, only Canadian citizens can donate within limits related to both contribution amounts and residence requirements. Make sure you understand the rules that apply to your situation.

Also, depending on the level of government and the party organization, different methods of fundraising may be traditional in your area. Yard sales, auctions, bake sales, car washes, and dinners all remain effective ways of raising money. They also serve as a way to introduce yourself and team to the community. In these cases, the money does not necessarily come from people who support you as a candidate. People pay for a service or an item, and you get the money for your campaign.

Other fundraising strategies depend to a larger extent on direct solicitation from individual supporters through phone calls or emails. Your riding association may host fundraising events from your support base, such as workshops or dinners. Your flyers, emails, and other campaign materials should always include an opportunity for supporters to provide donations to your campaign and the address where cheques may be sent or where a donation can be made on a secure website. Note that donations to federal and provincial candidates are eligible for income tax breaks (and subject to donation limits). Only individual Canadian citizens can donate in federal and provincial election campaigns. Donations to municipal candidates may come from either an individual or a corporation, are not tax refundable, and are not subject to donation limits.

EVERY BEST WISH ...

We firmly believe that many women in Nova Scotia have much to offer in public life. Whether it is skill, ability, education, life experience, or commitment, women are needed to balance public discourse and decisions made by our elected chambers. Substantive representation of all Nova Scotians is not only good for democracy, but is also good for public policy and governance.

While we recognize that there may be many obstacles, barriers, and challenges to this career choice, we believe that only the full and equal participation of women in political leadership will bring about both equality and equity in our communities. It is our hope that Nova Scotia women in all their diversity would consider public service and engage in our province's political process. We wish you all good luck as you run for office, today and in the future.

Appendix 1

PARTY FUNDS AND FINANCIAL MATTERS FOR WOMEN

As a result of lobbying, primarily by women within the parties, the three major parties have set up special funds for women candidates at the federal and provincial level.

All the parties that provide funds for women, both federally and provincially, provide the money to female candidates with no strings attached. The money can be used for whatever purpose the candidate and campaign team deem necessary.

Smith Announces Run for Party Nomination

February 4, 2014 Antigonish

Jane Smith, 23-year resident of Antigonish, has today announced her intention to seek the _____ Party nomination for the provincial constituency of Antigonish.

In announcing her bid today, Ms. Smith said, “The people of Antigonish have given me a lot over the years and I want to give back in a way that will make a difference by representing them in the Nova Scotia Legislature.”

Smith is a teacher at Antigonish High School and has spent many years volunteering at the local women’s centre, as a volunteer fire fighter, and as a United Way fund-raiser. This is her first bid for provincial office.

“Politics interests me because change interests me, and I think the people of Antigonish want change in representation and in the way politics is done,” she said. “I believe, with my experience and skills, I have a valuable contribution to make,” she added.

Her primary concerns are the education system, health care, and employment in the Antigonish area.

A native Nova Scotian, Jane Smith moved to Antigonish in 1991 to begin her career as a teacher. She is a single parent who is raising two children: Jason, 17, and Melissa, 15.

For more information, or Ms Smith’s biography and resumé, contact the Committee to Elect Jane Smith at _____.

CHRONOLOGY OF POLITICAL GAINS AND ACHIEVEMENTS

- 1758 The Nova Scotia Legislature was formed.
- 1884 The federal government introduced the Married Women's Property Act, recognizing the rights of married women to hold property.
- 1887 The municipal franchise was granted to widows and spinsters in Nova Scotia.
- 1893 A bill for the full enfranchisement of women was defeated in Nova Scotia.
- 1894 A second bill for equal franchise was defeated in Nova Scotia— by one vote.
- 1895 A bill for partial franchise for women in Nova Scotia was defeated by nine votes.
- 1917 Nurses were given the federal vote under the Military Voters Act.
Premier Murray killed the provincial Suffrage Bill, saying, “the enhancement of such a measure at the present time would serve no useful purpose.”
Women were granted eligibility for appointment to school boards in incorporated towns.
The Barristers and Solicitors Act was passed, permitting women to study and practice law on the same terms as men.
- 1918 Most women were granted the right to vote in federal elections across Canada. Most Nova Scotian women were permitted participation in the provincial elections; Asian and Native women were denied suffrage until 1948 and 1960 respectively.
- 1920 For the first time, women in Nova Scotia ran for political office—all three who ran were unsuccessful.
- 1921 Agnes Macphail became the first female Canadian Member of Parliament, a member of the Progressive Party of Canada. She had won the United Farmers of Ontario federal nomination over 10 men.
Women could be elected to legislative offices federally and in most provinces.
- 1928 Following the petition for Emily Murphy, Nellie McClung Louise McKinney, Irene Parby, and Henrietta Muir Edwards, the Supreme Court of Canada decided that women were not persons under the terms of the British North America Act and therefore could not be appointed to the Senate.
- 1929 After the famous “Person's Case” was heard before the British Privy Council (at that time the court of appeal for the Supreme Court of Canada), Canadian women were granted full political freedom.

- 1930 Cairine Wilson, from Ontario, became the first woman appointed to the Senate.
- 1935 Martha Black became the second woman elected to Parliament—14 years after Agnes Macphail's first win in 1921.
- 1957 Ellen Fairclough became the first woman to be appointed to a federal Cabinet position, when she became Secretary of State.
- 1960 Progressive Conservative Gladys Porter, a former Mayor of Kentville, became the first Nova Scotian woman elected at the provincial level.
- 1962 Chief Mary Ellen Pierro was the first woman to be elected chief in Nova Scotia at Wagmatcook First Nation in Cape Breton.
- 1969 Rachel Marshall of Millbrook was the first woman to be a band chief on a Canadian Indian Reserve.
- 1970 The Report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada was tabled.
- 1971 Canada Labour Code Amendments included protection from discrimination based on sex and marital status.
- 1974 Liberal Coline Campbell became the first woman to hold a Nova Scotia seat in Parliament.
Liberal Melinda MacLean was the second Nova Scotia woman elected at the provincial level.
- 1980 New Democrat Alexa McDonough became Canada's first female party leader.
- 1983 Progressive Conservative Maxine Cochran was elected. This by-election marked the first time two women held seats at the same time in Nova Scotia.
- 1984 This year was a breakthrough for women at the federal level—27 women sat in the House of Commons, the highest number in history, and 6 of them were appointed to Cabinet.
For the first time in a western democracy, federal leaders of the three parties agreed to participate in a televised debate on issues of concern to women.
Jeanne Sauve became the first woman Governor General of Canada.
Progressive Conservative Cora Etter was elected at the provincial level.
Daurene Lewis of Annapolis Royal became Canada's first Black woman mayor.
- 1988 Progressive Conservative Marie Dechman and Liberal Sandy Jolly were successful in securing provincial seats.
Liberal Mary Clancy was elected in a federal riding.
Ethel Blondin-Andrew is the first aboriginal woman elected to the House of Commons.

- 1989 Marie Dechman became the first woman Deputy Speaker of the House.
Audrey McLaughlin became leader of the federal New Democratic Party—the first woman to lead a national political party in Canada.
- 1991 After the Nova Scotia Municipal Elections in the fall of 1991, more than half of Nova Scotia municipalities had female mayors, including Moira Ducharme, Halifax’s first woman mayor.
Rita Johnston became Leader of British Columbia’s Social Credit Party and the first female provincial premier of Canada.
- 1993 Five women were elected to sit in the Nova Scotia Legislative Assembly. This was a record for Nova Scotia politics, but in spite of that, Nova Scotia was still second to last in the country in terms of female representation in the provincial government.
Kim Campbell became the first woman Prime Minister of Canada.
Catherine Callbeck of Prince Edward Island became the first elected woman provincial premier of Canada.
Jean Augustine was elected to Parliament, representing the Ontario’s Etobicoke-Lakeshore riding, becoming the first African Canadian woman to sit in Canada’s House of Commons. In 2002 she was appointed to Cabinet as Secretary of State for Multiculturalism and Status of Women.
- 1998 Yvonne Atwell was the first African Nova Scotian woman elected to the Nova Scotia Legislative Assembly, representing the New Democratic Party.
- 1999 A record number of female candidates ran in the Nova Scotia provincial election: 47 women ran for office, but again only 5 were elected to the Legislative Assembly.
- 2000 Helen MacDonald was elected leader of the Nova Scotia New Democratic Party.
- 2003 House of Commons has 63 women, which is about 20 per cent of the total of 301 seats in the Commons.
Thirty-six female candidates ran in the Nova Scotia provincial election; 6 were elected to the Legislative Assembly.
- 2006 The number of women in the House of Commons edges up to 65—21.1 per cent.
The provincial election has a record 49 women running. Nine win seats—17.3 per cent of the 52 seats.
- 2007 A by-election brought the number of women in the Nova Scotia legislature to 10—19.2 per cent of the 52 seats.
